My exciting travel adventure begins shortly after graduating in May 2008; I put most of my life in vacuum pack bags, stuffed them into three different suit cases and sat on top of them to secure closure. Alone in an airport with three sets of luggage and a hefty “over weight luggage” fine, I set off for my first teaching job in Seoul, South Korea.

I was greeted by smiling shining faces of a very young kindergarten class with no prior English experience. At first the students spoke only Korean and called me “mother” in their native language, slowly like little sponges they began learning words and phrases. It was amazing to watch, and everyday was a beautiful challenge of a first year teacher.

Upon completing my one year contract in Korea, I traveled to China to celebrate the Chinese New Year, hoped on a plane to eat sushi in Japan and ventured to explore many Southeast Asian countries and Asian islands. Meeting friends and experiencing everything life has to offer. Along the way, I met a master yoga guru who offered to let me stay with him in his home to study yoga, healing, energies and learn about Asian culture; I studied with him in Indonesia for a few months.

I returned to America and taught at an international school in Washington D.C. In the summer of 2010, I found myself on another plane to a different destination, next stop Italy. I traveled, worked and lived in Sicily, Rome and finally Bari; where I currently teach English and various topics including health and examination preparation at a college.

During the summer vacation, I taught at an English camp in Spain, living and working at the camp with the students was a wonderful experience. Hoping from Spain to North Africa to explore and learn about natural medicine and holistic health approaches. Currently, I am working on getting into a masters program.

I feel lucky and blessed every day for having the opportunity to travel and discover the world. My travels would not have been possible without my Towson University education.
